

HOW ONLINE COLLEGE REPRESENTATIVES SUPPORT STUDENTS

BY DEVRY UNIVERSITY

Whether you're curious about learning a new skill to enhance the job you have, or you want to explore reskilling to compete for the role you want, earning a degree can be a strong step in the right direction. In today's tech-driven world you have a variety of options when it comes to higher education, and those choices may feel overwhelming if you're searching on your own.

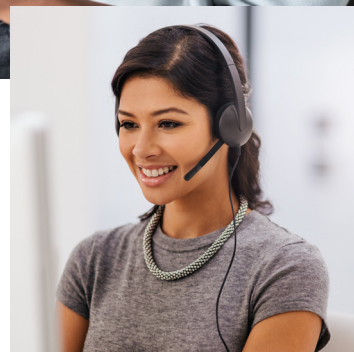

You shouldn't have to navigate your education alone. A student support advisor or admissions representative may help you answer questions about course scheduling, give you program and financial aid information as well as help you track your progress and figure out the next step of your educational journey.

If you've been wondering how to get in touch with a college advisor, or just have general questions about how they work with you throughout your program, read on for answers.

IS AN ADMISSIONS REPRESENTATIVE DIFFERENT FROM A STUDENT SUPPORT ADVISOR?

Yes, an admissions representative is different from a Student Support Advisor. An Admissions Representative helps students through the enrollment process and will explore programs with you to help you find one that fits your goals.

Once you've enrolled and have embarked on your academic journey, you'll be put in contact with an advisor. They can answer any ongoing questions you have about your academic requirements and can also help with class enrollment.

WHEN DO I TALK WITH A COLLEGE REPRESENTATIVE?

In truth, there's no wrong time to speak to an advisor or representative. Any time that you need advice on which classes you should take, how many courses you should enroll in or anything else regarding your college education is a great time to reach out to them.

Some of the reasons that students talk to their college advisors and representatives include:

- Help with enrollment
- Access to student resources
- Help with administrative services
- Help understanding financial aid
- Career planning
- Selecting courses
- Checking progress toward graduation

Of course, those aren't the only reasons to speak to a college representative. Whenever you're feeling confused about your next steps, you should feel free to reach out to them for guidance. And the sooner you connect, the easier it may be to get the answers you need to move forward with your education.

HOW DO I TALK TO A COLLEGE REPRESENTATIVE?

Prospective students can request more information to connect with a university's admissions team. A variety of online resources are also available that answer questions you might have. Student and career services pages on a university's website will offer more information about how students will be supported from enrollment through graduation and beyond.

HOW DO I ENROLL IN ONLINE CLASSES?

When you first decide on a program at DeVry, you'll speak with an Admissions Representative about your background and academic goals to create an individualized plan. To enroll in classes for the first time, you'll work with your Student Support Advisor to lock in the courses you wish to take and make any modifications to your overall plan.

Once you've been enrolled in your first courses with your advisor, you'll be able to enroll in any future courses on your own.
